

You and your friends have recently been discussing what to do after vocational school. On the internet you have come across the following blog.

University versus work experience

My friend and I both finished vocational school the same year. He went on to do a degree at university; I went directly into employment. After finishing university, he spent 2 years looking for a job, whereas I always found a job straight away. I'm not sure if it is because I have more years of work experience, but studying has negatively affected his chances of finding a job.

I would advise someone to work immediately after vocational school, and either do an evening / weekend degree over a longer period of time, or find an employer who will sponsor you to carry on part-time with your education. How do you feel about it?
